

Economics and Philosophy

Editorial policy

The disciplines of economics and philosophy each possess their own special analytical methods, whose combination is powerful and fruitful. Economics and Philosophy aims to promote the mutual enrichment of these disciplines by publishing articles and book reviews in all areas linking these subjects. Topics include the methodology and epistemology of economics, the foundations of decision theory and game theory, the nature of rational choice in general, historical work on economics with a philosophical purpose, ethical issues in economics, the use of economic techniques in ethical theory, and many other subjects.

1. Submission of Manuscripts

All correspondence should be sent to econphil@bovens.org. Ideally, articles should be submitted in pdf format, but Word, Rich Text format, and LaTeX are acceptable. The articles must be prepared for anonymous refereeing. Alternatively, a hard copy should be submitted to

The journal publishes papers in English only.

Authors of accepted articles will be asked to prepare a final version in the journal's style, following instructions that the editors will provide, and to submit it on disk together with a version on paper.

Submitting an article to Economics and Philosophy implies that it has not been published elsewhere and is not being considered for publication elsewhere.

Authors must obtain written permission to publish any material of which they do not own the copyright. Authors of articles published in the journal assign copyright to Cambridge University Press (with certain rights reserved) and you will receive a copyright assignment form for signature on acceptance of your paper.

2. Text conventions

Please attend to the following notes about style:

Economics and Philosophy exists for its readers, not its authors. We expect our authors to make their writing attractive, and as clear and easy to follow as it can be.

Economics and Philosophy is a journal of argument and analysis, not history and exegesis. Consequently, most of our articles will not need large numbers of references, footnotes and quotations. Keep them to a minimum.

References. There is no need to refer to everything that has been written on a subject; cite only the best or most useful or most accessible sources. Of course, you must acknowledge your intellectual debts. Make sure your readers know why they are being referred to a particular source; if it is not obvious from the text, use a footnote. Make sure they know what to look for and precisely where to look; normally you should specify page numbers. Use a consistent referencing system.

Footnotes. Footnotes are useful for references, and sometimes for making a point that would be distracting in the text. But if your point does not merit a place in the text, you should consider seriously whether it merits printing at all. Remember that hardly anyone reads footnotes anyway, so leave them out when you can.

Spelling and Grammar. Stick consistently to either UK usage or US usage.

3. Instructions for authors of accepted papers

Text, references and notes should all be double-spaced, with wide margins for editing. Notes will be printed as footnotes, but in the typescript they should be collected on separate sheets at the end. If your article contains figures or tables, send enlarged, accurately printed copies of them, suitable for reproduction.

De-anonymize your article if necessary. Please check it carefully for consistency in spelling and in your referencing system. Keep references, footnotes, and quotations to a minimum. Make references as precise as possible; normally you should specify page numbers. Check your list of references is in alphabetical order, and if you use the author-date system, arrange and punctuate it as follows:

Rawls, John. 1971. A Theory of Justice. Harvard University Press.

Rawls, John. 1982. 'Social utility and primary goods'. In Utilitarianism and Beyond, Amartya Sen and Bernard Williams (eds). Cambridge University Press, 123-234

Roemer, John E. 1985. 'Equality of talent'. Economics and Philosophy, 1:151-87.

If your native language is not English, our editorial staff are ready to give you some help in polishing the final version of your article. However, if this work goes far beyond ordinary copyediting, we may have to make a charge for it. Please ask for help if you would like it.

4. Proofs

Typographical or factual errors only may be changed at proof stage, within a given deadline. The publisher reserves the right to charge authors for correction of non-typographical errors.

5. Offprints

Authors of articles will receive 25 offprints of their article free of charge; additional copies may be purchased if ordered at proof stage on the form provided. (In the case of joint contributions, offprints will be sent to the first named author unless otherwise requested.)
