

Contents

List of Contributors

xvii

Preface

xxi

Section I Chromatin Organization and Dynamics

Chapter 1 DNA Mechanics

3

John F. Marko

1.1 Basic Properties of DNA 3

1.2 The Double Helix Is a Semiflexible Polymer 9

1.3 Double-Helix Topology and Twisting Stiffness 15

1.4 Beyond the Decoupled Harmonic Model of Double-Helix Elasticity 28

1.5 Severe Deformations of the Double Helix 30

1.6 Overview of DNA-Protein Interactions 33

References 37

Chapter 2 The Role of Nucleosome Positioning in Genome Function and Evolution

41

Alain Arneodo, Guénola Drillon, Françoise Argoul, and Benjamin Audit

2.1 Introduction 41

2.2 A Sequence-Dependent Physical Model of Nucleosome Occupancy 44

2.3 Comparing In Vivo and In Vitro Primary Structures of Chromatin 47

2.4 Functional Location of NIEBs in Saccharomyces cerevisiae 52

2.5 NIEBs and Intrinsic Flanking Nucleosomes Are Widely Distributed Along Human Chromosomes 59

|                                                                               |            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 2.6 Conclusion                                                                | 71         |
| Acknowledgments                                                               | 72         |
| References                                                                    | 72         |
| Chapter 3 DNA Supercoiling(omics)                                      | 81  |
| Laura Baranello, David Levens, and Fedor Kouzine                       |            |
| 3.1 Introduction                                                              | 81         |
| 3.2 Current Hot Spots                                                         | 87         |
| 3.3 Perspective                                                               | 94         |
| References                                                                    | 95         |
| Chapter 4 Dynamic Chromatin Folding in the Cell                        | 101 |
| Tadasu Nozaki, Damien F. Hudson, Sachiko Tamura, and Kazuhiro Maeshima |            |
| 4.1 Genomic DNA                                                               | 101        |
| 4.2 Nucleosome                                                                | 102        |
| 4.3 Chromatin Structure In Vitro                                              | 104        |
| 4.4 Chromatin Structure In Vivo                                               | 108        |
| 4.5 Liquid-Like Behavior of Chromatin                                         | 110        |
| 4.6 Higher Order Chromatin Structure                                          | 112        |
| 4.7 Mitotic Chromosome Formation                                              | 115        |
| Acknowledgments                                                               | 116        |
| References                                                                    | 116        |
| Chapter 5 Mesoscale Modeling of Chromatin Fibers                       | 123 |
| Gavin D. Bascom and Tamar Schlick                                      |            |
| 5.1 Introduction: The Chromatin Fiber Structure and Function                  | 123        |
| 5.2 Mesoscale Chromatin Modeling                                              | 129        |
| 5.3 Applications                                                              | 137        |
| 5.4 Future Prospects                                                          | 143        |
| Acknowledgments                                                               | 144        |
| References                                                                    | 144        |

|                  |                                                                                                    |            |
|------------------|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| Chapter 6 | A Polymer Physics View on Universal and Sequence-Specific Aspects of Chromosome Folding     | 149 |
|                  | Daniel Jost, Angelo Rosa, Cédric Vaillant, and Ralf Everaers                                |            |
| 6.1              | Introduction                                                                                       | 149        |
| 6.2              | Experimental Insight on Nuclear Genome Organization: From DNA to TADs and Chromosome Territories   | 150        |
| 6.3              | Universal Aspects of Chromosome Folding: Polymer Theory                                            | 154        |
| 6.4              | Sequence-Specific Aspects of Chromosome Folding: Polymer Theory                                    | 160        |
| 6.5              | Discussion and Conclusions                                                                         | 164        |
|                  | Acknowledgments                                                                                    | 166        |
|                  | References                                                                                         | 167        |
| Chapter 7 | Persistence of Long-Range Contacts at Insulators: Turnover Dynamics or Engaged Cohesin?     | 171 |
|                  | Raphaël Mourad and Olivier Cuvier                                                           |            |
| 7.1              | Enhancers, Promoters, and Insulators                                                               | 171        |
| 7.2              | Insulator-Binding Proteins and Cofactors                                                           | 172        |
| 7.3              | Barrier Insulators and Epigenetically Marked Chromatin Domains                                     | 175        |
| 7.4              | Persistence of Long-Range Contacts at Insulators: Equilibrium Dynamics or Deterministic Reactions? | 177        |
|                  | References                                                                                         | 179        |
| Chapter 8 | Long-Range Intranuclear Interactions                                                        | 187 |
|                  | Ivan Krivega and Ann Dean                                                                   |            |
| 8.1              | Introduction                                                                                       | 187        |
| 8.2              | Genome-Wide Long-Range Interactions                                                                | 188        |
| 8.3              | Mechanisms of Establishing and Maintaining Local Long-Range Interactions                           | 194        |
| 8.4              | Role of Alteration of 3D Organization in Disease                                                   | 196        |

|                                                                                                                                                    |            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 8.5 Future Directions                                                                                                                              | 201        |
| Acknowledgments                                                                                                                                    | 202        |
| References                                                                                                                                         | 202        |
| Chapter 9 The Multiple Effects of Molecular Crowding in the Cell Nucleus: From Molecular Dynamics to the Regulation of Nuclear Architecture | 209 |
| Théo Lebeaupin, Rebecca Smith, and Sébastien Huet                                                                                           |            |
| 9.1 Introduction                                                                                                                                   | 209        |
| 9.2 Macromolecular Crowding in the Nucleus: The Predictions of the Theoretical and In Vitro Data                                                   | 212        |
| 9.3 Current Experimental Evidences of the Impact of Crowding on Molecular Dynamics in the Cell Nucleus                                             | 218        |
| 9.4 A Physiological Role for Macromolecular Crowding Inside the Nucleus?                                                                           | 222        |
| 9.5 Conclusions and Future Challenges                                                                                                              | 225        |
| References                                                                                                                                         | 226        |

Section II Nuclear Envelope, Nuclear Bodies, and Nucleocytoplasmic Trafficking

|                                                                              |            |
|------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| Chapter 10 Nuclear Bodies                                             | 235 |
| Iain A. Sawyer and Miroslav Dundr                                     |            |
| 10.1 Introduction                                                            | 235        |
| 10.2 Nuclear Body Assembly                                                   | 237        |
| 10.3 Why Build a Nuclear Body?                                               | 239        |
| 10.4 List of Nuclear Bodies                                                  | 241        |
| 10.5 Recent Developments—Biophysical Examination of NB Function and Assembly | 249        |
| 10.6 Clinical Relevance                                                      | 250        |
| 10.7 Concluding Remarks                                                      | 251        |
| Acknowledgments                                                              | 252        |
| References                                                                   | 252        |

|                                                                                            |                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Chapter 11 Nucleolus: The Consummate Nuclear Body                                   | 257     |
| Laura Trinkle-Mulcahy                                                               |                |
| 11.1 A Brief History                                                                       | 257            |
| 11.2 Ribosome Biogenesis                                                                   | 262            |
| 11.3 Ribosomal Genes and NORs                                                              | 263            |
| 11.4 Nucleolar Plasticity                                                                  | 265            |
| 11.5 Building a Nucleolus                                                                  | 269            |
| 11.6 Physical Properties of Nucleoli                                                       | 271            |
| 11.7 Conclusion                                                                            | 272            |
| Acknowledgments                                                                            | 272            |
| References                                                                                 | 273            |
| Chapter 12 Transcription Factories as Spatial and Functional Organization Nodes | 283 |
| Konstantinos Sofiadis and Argyris Papanonis                                         |                |
| 12.1 Genome Organization in Respect to Transcriptional Activity                            | 283            |
| 12.2 An Operational Definition for Transcription Factories                                 | 285            |
| 12.3 Resolving Earlier Controversy About Transcription Factories                           | 286            |
| 12.4 Physical Properties of Transcription Factories                                        | 288            |
| 12.5 Functional Properties of Transcription Factories                                      | 289            |
| 12.6 The Loop Extrusion Model and Factories                                                | 291            |
| 12.7 Conclusion and Outlook                                                                | 292            |
| References                                                                                 | 292            |
| Further Reading                                                                            | 296            |
| Chapter 13 Polycomb Bodies                                                      | 297 |
| Louise Matheson and Sarah Elderkin                                                  |                |
| 13.1 Diversity of Polycomb Repressive Complexes                                            | 297            |
| 13.2 Polycomb Repressive Complex Recruitment                                               | 299            |
| 13.3 Polycomb Bodies: A Historical View                                                    | 300            |

|                                                                            |            |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 13.4 Polycomb Body Composition and Distribution                            | 301        |
| 13.5 Polycomb Body Dynamics                                                | 302        |
| 13.6 Polycomb Body Formation                                               | 304        |
| 13.7 Polycomb Bodies, Nuclear Architecture, and Gene Regulation            | 307        |
| 13.8 Specialized Functions of Polycomb Bodies                              | 313        |
| 13.9 Concluding Remarks                                                    | 314        |
| References                                                                 | 315        |
| Chapter 14 The Nuclear Lamina and Genome Organization               | 321 |
| Marie-Cécile Gaillard and Karen L. Reddy                            |            |
| 14.1 The Nuclear Lamina and Nuclear Envelope                               | 321        |
| 14.2 The Lamins                                                            | 323        |
| 14.3 The Lamins Directly Interact With INM Proteins                        | 324        |
| 14.4 The Lamina Links the Cytoskeleton With the Nucleus                    | 325        |
| 14.5 The Nuclear Lamina is Dynamic Through Mitosis                         | 326        |
| 14.6 The Nuclear Lamina is a Developmentally Dynamic Structure             | 327        |
| 14.7 Lamina-Associated Domains                                             | 327        |
| 14.8 Lamins and INM Proteins in LAD Organization                           | 330        |
| 14.9 The INM/Lamina as a Transcriptionally Repressive Compartment          | 330        |
| 14.10 Chromatin and LAD Organization                                       | 331        |
| 14.11 LADs and Genome Organization                                         | 333        |
| 14.12 Involvement of Nuclear Periphery in Human Diseases and Aging         | 333        |
| 14.13 Perspectives                                                         | 336        |
| References                                                                 | 337        |
| Chapter 15 Actin in the Cell Nucleus                                | 345 |
| Tomas Venit, Xin Xie, and Piergiorgio Percipalle                    |            |
| 15.1 Actin and Myosin Regulate Transcription by Eukaryotic RNA Polymerases | 345        |

|      |                                                                         |     |
|------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 15.2 | Cotranscriptional Association of Actin With Ribonucleoprotein Complexes | 349 |
| 15.3 | Actin From Gene to Polyribosomes: What Next?                            | 352 |
| 15.4 | Actin-Containing Chromatin Remodeling Complexes                         | 353 |
| 15.5 | Potential Roles of Actin in Chromatin-Remodeling Complexes              | 355 |
| 15.6 | Actin and Myosin in the Long-Range Movement of Chromosome Sites         | 358 |
| 15.7 | Actin as Part of Nucleoskeleton                                         | 358 |
| 15.8 | Actin, ARPs, and ABPs in DNA Damage Repair                              | 359 |
| 15.9 | Concluding Remarks                                                      | 360 |
|      | References                                                              | 361 |

Chapter 16 Nuclear Pores and the Genome 369

Maya Capelson

|      |                                                                  |     |
|------|------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 16.1 | Introduction                                                     | 369 |
| 16.2 | NPC Structure and Assembly                                       | 370 |
| 16.3 | Chromatin-Binding Roles of the NPC in Transcriptional Regulation | 373 |
| 16.4 | NPCs and Maintenance of Genome Integrity                         | 376 |
| 16.5 | Perspectives                                                     | 379 |
|      | References                                                       | 380 |

Chapter 17 Protein Transport Between the Nucleus and Cytoplasm 387

Yoichi Miyamoto, Yoshihiro Yoneda, and Masahiro Oka

|      |                                                           |     |
|------|-----------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 17.1 | Introduction                                              | 387 |
| 17.2 | Nuclear Pore Complex                                      | 387 |
| 17.3 | Signals for Nuclear Import and Export                     | 389 |
| 17.4 | Ran Gradient                                              | 390 |
| 17.5 | Molecular Mechanisms of Nuclear Protein Import and Export | 391 |

Contents

|                                                                             |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 17.6 Importin $\beta$ Family, Transporters of Nuclear-Cytoplasmic Transport | 392 |
| 17.7 Importin $\alpha$ , a cNLS Receptor Molecule                           | 393 |
| 17.8 Physiological Processes and Nuclear Transport Factors                  | 394 |
| 17.9 Conclusions                                                            | 396 |
| Acknowledgments                                                             | 397 |
| References                                                                  | 397 |

Section III Main Nuclear Functions

|                                                                                                                                                 |            |
|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| Chapter 18 Replicating Chromatin in the Eukaryotic Genome                                                                                | 407 |
| Molly R. Gordon, Daniel A. Bartlett, and David M. Gilbert                                                                                |            |
| 18.1 Introduction                                                                                                                               | 407        |
| 18.2 Toolkit: Studying Replication of Chromatin                                                                                                 | 408        |
| 18.3 Replication Initiation Depends on Chromatin Context                                                                                        | 409        |
| 18.4 Chromatin Folding and Replication Timing Regulation                                                                                        | 419        |
| 18.5 Replication Elongation: Making and Breaking Chromatin                                                                                      | 422        |
| 18.6 Chromatin Maturation                                                                                                                       | 424        |
| 18.7 Replication Termination                                                                                                                    | 425        |
| 18.8 Concluding Remarks                                                                                                                         | 426        |
| Acknowledgments                                                                                                                                 | 427        |
| References                                                                                                                                      | 427        |
| Further Reading                                                                                                                                 | 434        |
|                                                                                                                                             |            |
| Chapter 19 Promoter–Enhancer Looping and Regulatory Neighborhoods: Gene Regulation in the Framework of Topologically Associating Domains | 435 |
| Charbel Souaid, Sébastien Bloyer, and Daan Noordermeer                                                                                   |            |
| 19.1 Gene Regulation and DNA Looping Between Regulatory Elements                                                                                | 435        |

|                   |                                                                                                |            |
|-------------------|------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|------------|
| 19.2              | Gene Looping Within the Framework of TADs                                                      | 441        |
| 19.3              | DNA Looping and TAD Function as Regulators in Development and Disease                          | 448        |
| 19.4              | Conclusions and Outlook                                                                        | 451        |
|                   | Acknowledgments                                                                                | 451        |
|                   | References                                                                                     | 452        |
| Chapter 20 | Sailing the Hi-C's: Benefits and Remaining Challenges in Mapping Chromatin Interactions | 457 |
|                   | Yousra B. Zouari, Anne M. Molitor, and Tom Sexton                                       |            |
| 20.1              | Detecting Chromatin Interactions: From 3C to Hi-C                                              | 457        |
| 20.2              | What Can We Learn From Hi-C About Chromosome Folding?                                          | 459        |
| 20.3              | Other Applications of Hi-C                                                                     | 462        |
| 20.4              | Limitations of Hi-C                                                                            | 463        |
| 20.5              | Concluding Remarks                                                                             | 468        |
|                   | References                                                                                     | 468        |
| Chapter 21 | Chromatin Folding and Recombination                                                     | 475 |
|                   | Valentina Snetkova and Jane A. Skok                                                     |            |
| 21.1              | Introduction                                                                                   | 475        |
| 21.2              | RAG Targeting                                                                                  | 476        |
| 21.3              | Accessibility of the Antigen Receptor Loci                                                     | 477        |
| 21.4              | Allelic Exclusion                                                                              | 478        |
| 21.5              | Changes in Antigen Receptor Locus Architecture                                                 | 479        |
| 21.6              | Factors That Contribute to Locus Contraction                                                   | 481        |
| 21.7              | Insulator Elements and Their Role in Generating a Balanced V Gene Repertoire                   | 482        |
| 21.8              | RAG Off-Target Activity is Restricted Within a Loop                                            | 485        |
| 21.9              | Concluding Comments and Future Directions                                                      | 487        |
|                   | Acknowledgments                                                                                | 489        |
|                   | References                                                                                     | 489        |

Chapter 22 Altered Nucleus and Disease 493

Josette M. Northcott and Valerie M. Weaver

|      |                                                                     |     |
|------|---------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 22.1 | Introduction                                                        | 493 |
| 22.2 | Cancer-Associated Alterations to Nuclear Morphology                 | 494 |
| 22.3 | Nuclear Architecture: The Role of Proteins at the Nuclear Periphery | 496 |
| 22.4 | Chromatin Organization: A Means of Maintaining Genomic Stability    | 502 |
| 22.5 | Nuclear Bodies: Compartmentalization of Nuclear Processes           | 504 |
| 22.6 | Current Therapeutics and Prospective Targets                        | 506 |
| 22.7 | Summary                                                             | 507 |
|      | References                                                          | 507 |

Section IV Specific Features of Nuclear Organization in Main Model Organisms

Chapter 23 Yeast Nucleus: A Model for Chromatin Folding Principles 515

Etienne Almayrac and Emmanuelle Fabre

|      |                                                  |     |
|------|--------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 23.1 | Yeast Nuclear Anchoring Features                 | 515 |
| 23.2 | Models Emerged From Polymer Physics              | 518 |
| 23.3 | Chromosome Folding: Double Strand Break Outcomes | 519 |
| 23.4 | Chromosome Refolding Upon Physiological Changes  | 521 |
| 23.5 | Chromatin Dynamics, Cause, and Consequences      | 524 |
| 23.6 | Concluding Remarks and Perspectives              | 526 |
|      | Acknowledgments                                  | 527 |
|      | References                                       | 527 |

|                                                                                                                                |                |
|--------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|----------------|
| Chapter 24 Chromosomes and Chromatin in the Nematode Nucleus                                                            | 533     |
| Adriana Gonzalez-Sandoval and Peter Meister                                                                             |                |
| 24.1 Introduction                                                                                                              | 533            |
| 24.2 Nematodes: A Short Life Cycle and Easy Genetics                                                                           | 533            |
| 24.3 DNA and Chromatin Modifications                                                                                           | 535            |
| 24.4 Large-Scale Chromosome Organization                                                                                       | 540            |
| 24.5 The Special Case of the X Chromosome: Dosage Compensation, Chromatin Composition, and Large-Scale Chromosome Organization | 549            |
| 24.6 Concluding Remarks                                                                                                        | 551            |
| Acknowledgments                                                                                                                | 551            |
| References                                                                                                                     | 551            |
| Chapter 25 Nuclear Dynamics at Specific Cell Cycle Stages in the Slime Mold Physarum polycephalum            | 557 |
| Christophe Thiriet                                                                                                      |                |
| 25.1 The Life Cycle of Physarum                                                                                         | 558            |
| 25.2 The Diploid Stages                                                                                                        | 558            |
| 25.3 The Haploid Stages                                                                                                        | 559            |
| 25.4 Physarum Nucleus                                                                                                   | 559            |
| 25.5 Internalization of Exogenous Proteins                                                                                     | 560            |
| 25.6 Replication Coupled Chromatin Assembly                                                                                    | 561            |
| 25.7 Chromatin Dynamics in Transcription                                                                                       | 563            |
| 25.8 Perspective                                                                                                               | 565            |
| Acknowledgments                                                                                                                | 566            |
| References                                                                                                                     | 566            |
| Index                                                                                                                      | 569        |