

Contents

|                                                                                         |     |
|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Acknowledgements                                                                 | vi  |
| List of Illustrations                                                            | vii |
| Introduction                                                                            | 1   |
| 1 The Environmental Historiography of Britain                                           | 7   |
| 2 The Highlands and the Roots of Green Consciousness, 1750–1990                         | 21  |
| 3 Exploiting Scottish Semi-natural Woods, 1600–1850                                     | 53  |
| 4 The Pinewoods and Human Use, 1600–1900                                                | 71  |
| 5 The Atlantic Oakwoods as a Commercial Crop in the Eighteenth and Nineteenth Centuries | 87  |
| 6 Bogs and People in Scotland since 1600                                                | 99  |
| 7 Energy Rich, Energy Poor: Scotland, Ireland and Iceland, 1600–1800                    | 113 |
| 8 The Improvers and the Scottish Environment: Soils, Bogs and Woods                     | 135 |
| 9 Trees as Historic Landscapes: from Wallace's Oak to Reforesting Scotland              | 153 |
| 10 The Alien Species in Twentieth-Century Britain: Inventing a New Vermin               | 169 |
| 11 Modern Agriculture and the Decline of British Biodiversity                           | 183 |
| 12 History, Nature and Culture in British Nature Conservation                           | 199 |
| 13 Environmental Consciousness                                                          | 217 |
| Select Bibliography                                                              | 233 |
| Index                                                                            | 238 |