

ACKNOWLEDGMENTS

I would like to thank Linda Birke for asking me to submit my first piece of writing for what eventually became this book, my essay on the red knot, to Society and Animals. I also thank the members of the Society for Literature, Science, and the Arts who heard me present my work, and gave me important feedback, at the slsa conference over the past ten years. Tom Gannon and Spencer Schaffner wrote scholarly books on birds that inspired my work. I thank my colleagues at Drake University with whom I talked about this manuscript. I thank the Drake Center for the Humanities for supporting this book. Without Jeff Nealon's and Rich Doyle's instruction at Penn State, this book would not have been possible. Suki and Pippa were by my side during the writing of much of this book. I cannot thank Megan and Max enough for their love and support.

"Split the lark and you'll find the music," from The Poems of Emily Dickinson: Reading Edition, edited by Ralph W. Franklin (Cambridge MA: The Belknap Press of Harvard University Press, copyright © 1998, 1999 by the President and Fellows of Harvard College. © 1951, 1955, 1979, 1983 by the President and Fellows of Harvard College). A portion of chapter 1 originally appeared as "Avian Consciousness in Don DeLillo's The Body Artist," in Anthrozoös 22, no. 1 (2009): 5-18.

A portion of chapter 2 originally appeared as "Ornithological Biography, Animal Studies, and Starling Subjectivity," in Humanimalia: A Journal of Human/Animal Interface Studies 2, no. 3 (2011): 31–59. A portion of chapter 4 originally appeared as "What Is Red Knot Worth?: Valuing Human/Avian Interaction," in Society and Animals 12, no. 3 (2004): 253–66. All appear with permission.