

"A brilliantly readable book that not only gives Australian birds recognition long overdue, but allows for a fresh understanding of the way the world (and particularly our island continent) functions."

SEAN DOOLEY, Sydney Morning Herald

"Crammed with intriguing facts and ideas. . . . A serious feat of synthesis that few bird observers or natural historians, let alone few authors, would have the knowledge, experience, time or access to academic resources to pull together."

BOB BEALE, Sunday Age

"Low takes us on a sweeping exploration of the southern hemisphere to reveal where songbirds evolved, how they started to sing, and why we should care."

MICHAEL WEBSTER, Cornell Laboratory of Ornithology

"This book is a romp into bird evolution and the people who studied it, showing what is possible from the perspective of a unique environment."

BERND HEINRICH, author of Mind of the Raven, Nesting Season, and One Wild Bird at a Time

"On visiting Australia years ago, I struggled to understand bird behaviour I observed. This is the book I needed then, an erudite but accessible insight into why Australia's birds are 'different.'"

ROBERT PRYS-JONES, Head of Bird Group, Natural History Museum (London)

"Both informative and provocative, Where Song Began will be enjoyed by all who are interested in birds. It is well written, engaging, and scholarly. A great read."

JOHN M. MARZLUFF, author of Welcome to Subirdia
