

A HANDBOOK OF PRACTICING ANTHROPOLOGY

"This book should be in the hands of every student interested in a career in anthropology. There is no other collection that better summarizes opportunities to practice anthropology beyond the academy."

Erve Chambers, University of Maryland, College Park

"As in development, all practice of anthropology is a contact sport. This is what I always tell my students. For those who teach, practice, or study any aspect of anthropology, including development, Riall Nolan's rich collection is the book to go to, for learning how to apply our knowledge militantly and help improve the world we live in."

Michael M. Cernea, George Washington University and Brookings Institution

A Handbook of Practicing Anthropology presents a comprehensive account of contemporary, collaborative anthropological practice written primarily by non-academic anthropologist practitioners. The diverse range of topics includes professional training and preparation, job hunting, professional development, career planning, ethics, teamwork, and other important aspects of anthropological practice beyond the confines of academia. Key practice sectors such as freelancing, managing a consulting firm, and working for government, nonprofits, and corporations are also examined. Additional chapters address work in the domains of health, industry, education, international development, and the military. A Handbook of Practicing Anthropology is an essential resource for anyone contemplating a career path outside the academy and wishing to apply anthropological principles to their work in a wide range of professional settings.

Riall W. Nolan is Professor of anthropology at Purdue University. He has worked overseas for nearly 20 years as a practicing anthropologist, in Africa, Asia, and the Middle East, mainly in international development. He writes and consults on issues of international development, international education, cross-cultural adaptation, and applied anthropology.
