

Contents

|                 |                                                             |      |
|-----------------|-------------------------------------------------------------|------|
|                 | Foreword .....                                              | xi   |
|                 | Benjamin B. Beck                                            |      |
|                 | Preface                                                     |      |
|                 | Who Lives, Who Dies, and Why                                |      |
|                 | It Shouldn't Be All about Us .....                   | xiii |
|                 | Acknowledgments .....                                       | xxix |
| Part One | Ethics, Conservation, and Animal Protection          |      |
|                 | Trying to Make Difficult Decisions Easier .....      | 1    |
| 1        | The Infirm Ethical Foundations of Conservation ..... | 9    |
|                 | John A. Vucetich and Michael P. Nelson                      |      |
| 2        | Venturing beyond the Tyranny of Small Differences    |      |
|                 | The Animal Protection Movement, Conservation, and    |      |
|                 | Environmental Education .....                        | 27   |
|                 | Paul Waldau                                                 |      |
| 3        | Ecocide and the Extinction of Animal Minds .....     | 45   |
|                 | Eileen Crist                                                |      |
| 4        | Talking about Bushmeat .....                         | 63   |
|                 | Dale Peterson                                               |      |
| 5        | Conservation, Animal Rights, and Human Welfare       |      |
|                 | A Pragmatic View of the "Bushmeat Crisis" .....      | 77   |
|                 | Ben A. Minter                                               |      |

|                   |                                                                                                                                         |     |
|-------------------|-----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Part Two   | Conservation Behavior and "Enlightened Management"                                                                               |     |
|                   | Guidelines for Restoring, Recreating, and Redecorating Nature . . . . .                                                          | 95  |
| 6          | Why We Really Don't Care about the Evidence in Evidence-Based Decision Making in Conservation (and How to Change This) . . . . . | 103 |
|                   | Daniel T. Blumstein                                                                                                                     |     |
| 7          | Cautionary Wildlife Tales                                                                                                        |     |
|                   | Learning to Fail or Failing to Learn? . . . . .                                                                                  | 113 |
|                   | Joel Berger                                                                                                                             |     |
| 8          | Coyotes, Compassionate Conservation, and Coexistence                                                                             |     |
|                   | Why Ignoring Nature Means Ineffective "Predator Management" . . . . .                                                            | 119 |
|                   | Camilla H. Fox                                                                                                                          |     |
| 9          | Why Evolutionary Biology Is Important for Conservation                                                                           |     |
|                   | Toward Evolutionarily Sustainable Harvest Management . . . . .                                                                   | 125 |
|                   | Marco Festa-Bianchet                                                                                                                    |     |
| 10         | Reintroductions to "Ratchet Up" Public Perceptions of Biodiversity                                                               |     |
|                   | Reversing the Extinction of Experience through Animal Restorations . . . . .                                                     | 137 |
|                   | Philip J. Seddon and Yolanda van Heezik                                                                                                 |     |
| 11         | Przewalski's Horses and Red Wolves                                                                                               |     |
|                   | Importance of Behavioral Research for Species Brought Back from the Brink of Extinction . . . . .                                | 153 |
|                   | Sarah R. B. King                                                                                                                        |     |
| 12         | Why Individuals Matter                                                                                                           |     |
|                   | Lessons in Animal Welfare and Conservation . . . . .                                                                             | 159 |
|                   | Liv Baker                                                                                                                               |     |
| Part Three | Conservation Economics and Politics                                                                                              |     |
|                   | It All Comes Down to Money . . . . .                                                                                             | 167 |
| 13         | The Imperative of Steady State Economics for Wild Animal Welfare . . . . .                                                       | 171 |
|                   | Brian Czech                                                                                                                             |     |
| 14         | Conservation, Biodiversity, and Tourism in New Zealand                                                                           |     |
|                   | Engaging with the Conservation Economy . . . . .                                                                                 | 183 |
|                   | Eric J. Shelton                                                                                                                         |     |

|                  |                                                                                                                                                                         |     |
|------------------|-------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Part Four | Human Dimensions of Social Justice, Empathy, and Compassionfor Animals and Other Nature                                                                     | 197 |
| 15               | Anthropological Perspectives on Ignoring NatureBarbara J. King                                                                                               | 205 |
| 16               | Nature and Animals in Human Social InteractionsFostering Environmental IdentitySusan Clayton                                                      | 211 |
| 17               | Conservation Social WorkThe Interconnectedness of Biodiversity Health andHuman ResiliencePhilip Tedeschi, Sarah M. Bexell, and Jolie NeSmith | 223 |
| 18               | The War on Nature—Turning the Tide?Lessons from Other Movements and Conservation HistoryDavid Johns                                               | 237 |
| 19               | Consuming NatureThe Cultural Politics of Animals and the Environment inthe Mass MediaCarrie Packwood Freeman and Jason Leigh Jarvis          | 257 |
| 20               | Children, Animals, and Social NeuroscienceEmpathy, Conservation Education, and ActivismOlin E. "Gene" Myers Jr.                                   | 271 |
| Part Five | Culture, Religion, and SpiritualityUsing Empathy and Compassion to Develop a Unified Global Movementto Protect Animals and Their Homes           | 287 |
| 21               | Compassionate ConservationA Paradigm Shift for Wildlife Management in AustralasiaDaniel Ramp, Dror Ben-Ami, Keely Boom, and David B. Croft        | 295 |
| 22               | Explaining China's Wildlife CrisisCultural Tradition or Politics of DevelopmentPeter J. Li                                                        | 317 |
| 23               | A Triangular Playing FieldThe Social, Economic, and Ethical Context of ConservingIndia's Natural HeritageVivek Menon                         | 331 |

|           |                                                             |     |
|-----------|-------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 24 | Conservation and Its Challenges in Kenya .....       | 343 |
|           | Josphat Ngonyo and Mariam Wanjala                           |     |
| 25 | Is Green Religion an Oxymoron?                       |     |
|           | Biocultural Evolution and Earthly Spirituality ..... | 353 |
|           | Bron Taylor                                                 |     |
| 26 | Avatar                                               |     |
|           | The Search for Biosynergy and Compassion .....       | 361 |
|           | Anthony L. Rose and A. Gabriela Rose                        |     |
|           | Some Closing Words                                   |     |
|           | Moving Ahead with Heart, Peace, and Compassion ..... | 379 |
|           | Marc Bekoff                                                 |     |
|           | About the Contributors .....                         | 389 |
|           | Contributors' Contact Information .....              | 399 |
|           | Index .....                                          | 405 |