

— Contents —

|                                                                                                         |     |
|---------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| Introduction                                                                                            | I   |
| 1. Sex and the Single Animal                                                                            | 13  |
| 2. Learning from Animals: Natural History forChildren in the Eighteenth and NineteenthCenturies | 29  |
| 3. Toward a More Peaceable Kingdom                                                                      | 50  |
| 4. Animal Consciousness: Some HistoricalPerspective                                                 | 63  |
| 5. Plus Ça Change: Antivivisection Thenand Now                                                      | 73  |
| 6. Mad Cow Mysteries                                                                                    | 91  |
| 7. Understanding Audiences and Misunder-standing Audiences: Some Publics for Science                | 103 |
| 8. Foreword to Charles Darwin, The Variationof Animals and Plants under Domestication       | 123 |

|                                                                                                                |     |
|----------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------------|-----|
| 9. Race, Breed, and Myths of Origin:Chillingham Cattle as Ancient Britons                                  | 132 |
| 10. Possessing Mother Nature: Genetic Capitalin Eighteenth-Century Britain                                 | 157 |
| 11. Our Animal Cousins                                                                                         | 177 |
| 12. Counting Sheep in the English Lake District:Rare Breeds, Local Knowledge, andEnvironmental History | 186 |
| 13. Beasts in the Jungle (or Wherever)                                                                         | 203 |
| Bibliography                                                                                                   | 213 |
| Index                                                                                                          | 227 |