A book is an iceberg, and the author's share the part that floats above the surface. Too many people have assisted this effort in too many ways to enumerate here; those not mentioned are not forgotten. Richard Lair was unstinting with his expertise and wisdom. Mick Elmore, Tuchpong Tulyayong, Dr. Suvit Yodmani, Daisy Tambi, P. S. Easa, Madhusudan Annadaana, Raman Sukumar, Dr. G. Paul Frederick, Lynette Hart, V. Krishnamurthy, and, especially, Jayantha Jayewardene opened windows onto the ways of elephants and other matters in Thailand, India, and Sri Lanka. Many along the elephant trail, from Tampa Bay to Taungoo, showed hospitality to a wayward writer. My thanks to Kathy and Robert Dodd, Alice Ray, Senerath Pahathkumbura, Mark Worth, Toby Old and Holly Gaskin, the Friends of the Asian Elephant, the Myanmar Beauty Guest House in Taungoo, Joshe George in the delightful village of Meloor, and the master animal healer Nigel Otter at the India Project for Animals and Nature, and to N. Baskaran, Rathinasamy Aruguman, Arun Ventakaram, and their comrades at the Indian Institute of Science's Mudumalai research station. The fearless elephant trackers of the Sri Lankan Department of Wildlife Conservation shared not only hospitality but adventure and songs.

Many archivists, librarians, and scholars opened their files and opened windows on rare lore and long-ago eras. Thanks especially to the keepers of the circus flame at the Somers Historical Society; to Professors Kumudu Kumara and I. V. Edirisinghe and the reference librarians at the University of Colombo; and to Erin Foley and Fred Dahlinger at the Circus World Museum, Pamela McClusky and Marta Pinto-Llorca at the Seattle Art Museum, Aaron Schmidt at the Boston Public Library, Judith Henchy at the University of Washington Libraries, and Pat Maluy and his colleagues at the Woodland Park Zoo. And to Brock Roberts for all his help digging out the nuggets from the stacks.

I am indebted to all those who read the manuscript in whole or in part and advised and dissented, including Anne Sheeran, Dan Zucker, Kate Pflaumer, Richard Lair, Mick Elmore, John Van Couvering, Diedra Henderson, and Ken and Ivory Levine. Any errors are mine, not theirs, but are fewer thanks to them.

Thanks especially to Laura van Dam, a wise and patient editor, who nurtured this book from its conception and curbed its rogue tendencies each time it tried to stray. And to Lucia Hansen, who makes it all possible.
