

Human Development Across the Lifespan, by John Dacey and John Travers, provides a well-balanced, chronological view of the lifespan from conception through death. The text's succinct coverage and examples that relate effectively to education, nursing, and psychology majors have made this book a favorite with professors, while students applaud the built-in study guide. Along with updated citations and examples, the Updated Fifth Edition includes increased coverage of exceptional individuals, thoroughly revised adulthood chapters, and increased integration of web and media resources.

Visit the text Online Learning Center at www.mhhe.com/dacey5u. This website includes chapter outlines, practice quizzes, interactive exercises, and flashcards for the student. On the password-protected side, the instructor will find teaching resources such as the Instructor's Course Planner, Image Bank, PowerPoint files, and web links to additional resources.

The Online Learning Center provides access to PowerWeb, a unique online reader that brings current topics into the classroom with daily news feeds from The New York Times. Curriculum-based materials, weekly updates with e-mail quizzes, referred web links, research tools, study aids, and interactive exercises give students the opportunity to sharpen their critical thinking skills. A PowerWeb access card is packaged FREE with each new copy of the text.

Making the Grade Student CD-ROM—Packaged free with each copy of the text, this test-prep CD-ROM is designed to help students improve their performance. In addition to practice exams, the CD-ROM contains a Learning Style Assessment, a Guide to Electronic Research, and a Study Skills Primer to help students Make the Grade!
